Notes on the text

All information given in this booklet is exactly as shown in the original document. For this reason there are many abbreviations. As there can be several interpretations for an abbreviation, it would be wrong to make assumptions. For example, 'Josh' could be any of Joseph, Joshua, Josiah.

Similarly, each occupier is listed in the index (Part Two) for each time they appear in the document. It is safer to do this than to assume it is the same person.

The only information that has been added to the raw data by me is the addition of an identifying number for each entry.

Part 1

Part 1 is a copy of the information given in the original document. One change that I made was to swap round the two columns 'Owner' and 'Occupier' and their corresponding information, so that 'Owner' becomes the first column. This has consequently meant that these have had to be put into alphabetical order. Section 1 therefore forms an alphabetical list of Owners with the corresponding information about the cost of rate and the occupier of the house or land.

Part 2

Part 2 is an index of Occupiers. To find an entry for an occupier, firstly look up their name in the index. Take a note of the corresponding entry number, and turn to Part 1 and locate the full entry.

N.B. In Parts 1 and 2, where a '2' appears, this denotes there being two people named for that particular entry; i.e. there are either 2 occupiers or 2 owners. If, in the original document, it simply states "and others", "& oths" has been added and no other reference is given. Where two occupiers are given, these can be found at the beginning of Section 2. The second of two named owners can be found in a separate table at the end of Section One.

Background to Poor Relief

The climate in which the 1828 rates were collected was one of frustration and anger at the system of poor relief in this country. Many people resented having to pay rates for poor relief, the cost of which was escalating dramatically, due to factors such as the increase of population and the effect of the Napoleonic Wars (1799 - 1815).

At the time the 1828 rates were levied, the system was still the 1601 Poor Law; the aim of which was to provide relief for the needy in their own parish, under the jurisdiction of the church. To fund this, landowners and householders were charged a rate to provide the means for helping those who needed it.

The cost of providing for the poor was steadily rising at this time. The national expenditure on relief in 1833 was £7 million; 12 times higher than in 1685. One reason for this was that the population was on the increase. Nationally, the population doubled between 1801 – 1851, from 10.5 million to 21.0 million (Hopkins, 1979, pp17). The key reason for this was probably the effect of industrialisation. The Napoleonic Wars also contributed to the significant rise in cost as it caused the usual increase in prices, whilst the end of the wars in 1815 found soldiers returning home only to discover that there were no jobs.

There was also a general dislike of the system of poor relief, from both the ratepayers and the poor themselves. Ideas such as Laissez-faire and Benthamism were popularised, for the landowners and ratepayers, by authors like Samuel Smiles and Jeremy Bentham. Benthamism, desiring the “greatest happiness for the greatest number” seemed to disregard the fact that the poor were the greatest number, whilst individualists claimed that “they have taken away a good reason for hard work” (Malthus, 1798). The poor themselves were influenced by some of the clergy’s stance that it was “God’s will” that they were poor, whilst some also felt ashamed that they had to receive help.

The job of overseer was, on the whole, an unpopular one for various reasons. Most people felt that the position should be filled by persons of high esteem in the parish, yet the post remained unpopular. It was often an unpaid position, so there was no incentive for people to desire the post. It was also a large job to collect the rates owed. Overseers were also viewed in society as being something of a nuisance; there was often resentment at the overseers for collecting money that many people did not wish to pay. It was not uncommon, however, for friends of the overseer to be ‘let off’ their payments.

The 1601 Poor Law is also renowned for its lack of uniformity. Parishes could spend the collected rates on anything they deemed suitable; there were no checks made by the government. The state of the poor, especially the labourer, also meant that systems such as the Speenhamland System (1795), and Labour Rate were introduced to supplement the wages of agricultural labourers.

The climate in which these rates were therefore collected was an uncertain one. It was only to be 6 years later that the 1834 Poor Law Amendment Act was enacted, creating many changes to the system, both good and bad in themselves.

The 1828 Poor Rate for Nailsea

The original document is signed by -

Wm White, Churchwarden:

George Withey, Churchwarden:

Robert Willcox, Overseer:

Joseph Oram, Overseer

and by what appear to be two Justices for the County of Somerset whose signatures defy interpretation.

Both the two overseers and the two churchwardens are unremarkable in their job. These men appear to be well-respected men of the parish.

Two of the men each appear in 9 separate entries in the document; both George Withey and Joseph Oram appear as occupier of 5 premises, owner of 3 and both owner and occupier of 1 property. Wm White, assuming he is William White, also seems unremarkable as he appears 4 times. Robert Willcox however appears to be the “odd one out”. He seems not to appear at all in this document as either an owner or occupier, unless his name has been “mis-spelt” by the inspectors. Even then though, he might only appear once as an occupier.

These people are certainly not the most influential in Nailsea though. This position must surely be filled by the owner of the Glassworks and many other properties around Nailsea: Jno Rob’t Lucas. Within Nailsea, he was the owner of approximately 62 premises. Only two of these were jointly owned. Lucas is also the occupier of 6 premises; 4 of which are jointly occupied.

The two largest single amounts levied in this document are both levied on JR Lucas. The amount £25:0:0 is levied on the Glassworks, which is a large sum of money (entry number 347). The highest amount though is £66:13:4, which is levied on a piece of land, described as being for the use of “trade” (entry number 348). The occupiers of this land are “Lucas, Homer and Co”, the same company that ran the Glassworks. Where this land was situated and what it was used for remain a mystery.

It was in July 1828 that JR Lucas died (Thomas, 1987, pp4); 5 months before this document is dated. Yet in none of the entries is Lucas described as ‘deceased’ or anything similar. This remains a mystery as to why he is described as being alive when other entries show the person concerned to be deceased, such as entries 433-435; the “late GP Seymour”.

Another mystery also contained in the document is that despite the industry having been established for many years, there is only one coal mine mentioned in the 1828 rates. The mine is not given by name, and could therefore be one of several. As the Glassworks were in operation at this time, it is possible that the pit mentioned in the rates is either Engine Pit or Nailsea Heath Pit, both of which were owned by Lucas, as was the Glassworks. Both of these coalworks are known to have been supplying Glassworks with coal at this period (Thomas, 1984, pp35). The mystery still remains as to why the other coalmines in operation in Nailsea at the time, such as the Double Screens pit or the pits around the Golden Valley area, are not mentioned in these rates.

The variation in the amounts that people paid give an interesting insight into Nailsea at the time. As seen above, the two largest sums of money were paid by JR Lucas for property occupied by Lucas, Homer and Co. The two smallest payments are worth noting as well. Not because they are paid by a relatively insignificant family, but because they are from two of the most influential men in the area. Entries 27 and 40 both show the price levied, if it can be called such, as being £0.0.0. One of these is a piece of waste land occupied by Sir John Smyth. The other is an entry without specific description of the land/property involved, owned by Lucas and Jno Noble. The next lowest payments are that of £0.0.1½, which are paid by two separate individuals; James Rogers (entry 426) and Samuel Sage (entry 430).

There is also evidence that the cost of poor relief was fluctuating wildly in Nailsea. The total amount of Poor Relief collected stated at the end of the document is £347.6s 9d. Compared to the early days of Poor Relief, this amount is quite high; the early records for Nailsea show the cost to be between twenty and forty pounds (Pullan, 1980, pp7). The cost of this 1828 Poor Rate was not the highest it had reached though. In 1814, the cost peaked at over seven hundred pounds. This wild fluctuation in the cost of poor relief seems to be contrary to the general national trend at this time. Whilst in many places the cost was steadily rising, in Nailsea it varied enormously, with no apparent reason for this.
